

The Environmental Records Centre for Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly

We work to collate, manage, interpret and disseminate a wealth of local biological and geological information to help improve the understanding of our natural environment.

- Holds over 6½ million species records covering terrestrial, freshwater and marine wildlife.
- Collates information from local and national recorders and recording groups, conservation organisations and members of the public.
- Map habitats, species, geology and conservation designations to give a comprehensive view of our environment.
- Distributes data for conservation purposes; management, decision-making, education and research.
- Runs and collaborates in conservation projects across Cornwall
- Provides information and advice through the Wildlife Information Service.
- Delivers a programme of workshops to improve identification and recording skills.
- Supports recorders and local groups and provides online and library resources.
- Supports the production of natural history publications.
- Encourages biological recording via online wildlife recording; www.ORKS.org.uk
